FOR FORTY-ONE YEARS' SERVICE AS S. S. LEADER

Tribute Paid Late C. W. Jackson at Expiration of Service as Superintendent of Sunday School

The following tribute was paid the late C. W. Jackson by a member of the Methodist Sunday School of which he was superintendent for forty-one years, and was published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate three years ago, after he had sent in his resignation as such superintendent:

"Forty-one years of true and faithful service as a Sunday school superintendent is a record held by few. It was with regret by every member of the Moss Point, Miss., Sunday school that Mr. C. W. Jackson's resignation was accepted after a petition signed by them asking that he reconsider his decision.

"Mr. Jackson came to Moss Point from Mobile, Ala., in his early young manhood and identified himself immediately with the Methodist Sunday school and church, and his true Christian zeal and qualifications as an executive officer were quickly noted. He was elected the Sunday school superintendent. Serving under twenty-one pastors he was re-nominated and elected each succeeding year until forty-one have passed. With very few exceptions, and then when providentially hindered, Mr. Jackson has been present every Sunday morning to greet teachers, pupils and visitors, conducting the school in a systematic, religious manner. It is only since his resignation that the school has begun to realize its great loss.

"Mr. Jackson has been an example of unquestionable Christian character, worthy of emulation. He has seen children grown to young manhood and young womanhood and their children being taught and led into a life of service for the God he loved and served so well and faithfully. Truly his place cannot be easily filled, and it is the sincere regret of the entire school, some of whom have been in attendance during Mr. Jackson's superintendency of forty-one years, that he has deemed it best to retire."

Miss Ina Thompson sent the above tribute to the Christian Advocate following Mr. Jackson's resignation.

'Visionary' former MP mayor killed in crash

■ Louis Jackson
spearheaded city's annexation push

By NATALIE CHAMBERS
The Mississippi Press

MOSS POINT — Former Moss Point mayor Louis Jackson, who spearheaded the city's efforts to annex 8½ miles of Escatawpa, died during a one-vehicle accident in Mobile County Monday evening.

Jackson, 60, was returning to Mobile after a visit to Moss Point when he apparently lost control of his sport utility vehicle on Interstate 10 near the Theodore exit.

Family members said Jackson had severe artery blockage and that those health troubles may have been contributing factors to the accident and subsequent death. Jackson was hospitalized as recently as last week.

Lucille Nettles, Jackson's cousin, said Jackson was at her Moss Point home most of Monday.

She said Jackson knew she was concerned about his well-being and he kept in constant contact with her. She said witnesses reported to law enforcement of seeing Jackson's sport utility vehicle dip backward and forward before the accident that claimed his life.

Jackson was living in an apartment in Mobile while awaiting repairs to his Moss Point home that was damaged by Hurricane Ivan.

During his career, Jackson saw both sides. He was loved and hated alike.

"In my view, Louis Jackson was a black political pioneer in Moss Point politics," said Curley Clark, president of the Moss Point-Jackson County

NAACP.

Clark said Jackson's first victory as mayor served as a symbol of achievement for blacks in politics to follow.

He said the NAACP had worked hard to encourage blacks to be more politically active and Jackson's victory rewarded the NAACP's labor.

Just as the NAACP supported Jackson on some issues, the organization opposed him on others, particularly the Escatawpa annexation.

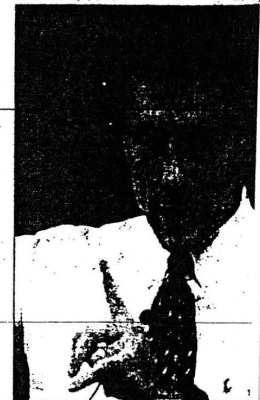

"I remember that the black community was torn with the annexation issue," Clark said.

"There was some who felt like, by annexing the portion of Moss Point that used to be Escatawpa, that it would make it more difficult to elect a black mayor. They felt like it, in essence, would dilute black voting strength," Clark said.

"There was another view from those visionaries who felt like in order for Moss Point to grow, that it needed to expand its boundaries northward to include those areas around I-10 for economic purposes," he said.

"Louis Jackson was among those visionaries who held those views. As history would have it, as a result of his steadfastness, Moss Point has grown and the economic benefits from that area surrounding Interstate 10 are now being realized," Clark added.

Linda Holden, Moss Point's economic development specialist, said the annexed area became the lifeline of Moss Point when the city lost key industries in 2001, such as International Paper and Rohm and Haas. It was also Jackson's crowning achievement in office, she believes.

"He was one of the most effective leaders for a community that I have had the privilege of working with," Holden said.

Jackson wore a lot of "first" titles because of the color of skin.

But former alderman Michael Vice said race never played a part in Jackson's decision. He said Jackson acted on what was best for all of Moss Point.

"Louis was always open-minded and willing to listen to make things better," he said.

Vice said he and Jackson pushed for changes within the fire department and their brainstorming resulted in new fire stations in Kreole and Escatawpa, built for the price of one.

"Also, before Louis and I got together, the city spent tremendous amounts of money restoring fire trucks. I said it's ridiculous to spend that money when a new fire truck would cost less money," Vice said.

He said Jackson studied his recommendation and the city bought four new fire trucks.

"I had hoped his health would get better and he would take over the job and straighten this city back out," said Vice, owner of M&D Construction in Moss Point.

Jackson County Sheriff Mike Byrd said Jackson's quest was not to do what was popular, but what was right.

Former Moss Point alderman JR. Spillers was elected alderman in 1977 along with Jackson.

Jackson, Spillers and Willie Williams were the first blacks elected to the Moss Point Board of Aldermen in 1977.

Jackson served two consecutive terms.

In 1985, Jackson was elected the city's first black mayor and served two consecutive four-year terms. After that, he took a self-imposed four-year hiatus and in 1997, sought and won re-election over the incumbent mayor, Ira Polk.

"Louis was a very smart fellow. He was very intelligent. He understood the budget and all that stuff. I admired his brain," Spillers said.

"He provided stable leadership and proved we could run the city if we put our minds to it," he said.

Ward 4 Alderman Shorty Middleton said he appreciates Jackson's annexation stance.

"Louis was brilliant when it comes to city government," Middleton said.

"Being on the Board of Aldermen, I can see how Moss Point would not have existed without it," he said.

City employee Shirley Joseph was Jackson's secretary.

"He was a good boss to work for. He was a fair boss," she said.

Joseph recalled that Jackson never drove fast in his old truck, which took as many jokes as Jackson did.

Former police chief Butch Gager was named chief primarily at Jackson's recommendation.

"I think he was a fine man. He did a lot for the community and city. He did a lot for me, personally," Gager said.

Gager accompanied police Monday evening when information of Jackson's fatal accident was relayed to his Moss Point family.

Jackson was elected first black president of the Mississippi Municipal League (formerly association) in June 1991.

Biloxi Councilman Eric Dickey said Jackson provided the group with great encouragement.

"He was very energetic. He offered great qualities and a wealth of information over his tenure and I was honored to have served with him," Dickey said.

Friend Ruth Spillers said Jackson stopped by Chef Leon's Restaurant about 4:30 Monday afternoon where Martin Luther King Jr. festivities had been held earlier that day. She said he gave a $20 donation and told owner Addie Wells he wanted to eat something, but had to leave.

Jackson was known for having stepped on toes of area environmentalists in Moss Point when, early in his career, he allowed a sludge-bearing train known as the "poo-poo choo-choo" to stop in the city. The train had been banned by cities and towns across the United States.

During Jackson's final term, Moss Point joined Pascagoula in refusing to tie onto the Jackson County Industrial Water Pipeline. The Board of Supervisors at the time was trying to get the cities on the controversial project to help pay for the project.

Jackson said the supervisors never told the Moss Point Board of Aldermen how much it would cost the city to tie into the line, adding that Moss Point had access to water from the existing industrial water pipeline under an agreement approved when that pipeline was built.

He said he would rather the city use that water and build its own treatment plant.

Jackson continued development of Pelican Landing Conference Center, a project initiated by the Ira Polk administration.

"I think (Jackson's death) is a big loss for us. He had gotten so ill, I really felt sorry for him. I think he did a great service to us during his tenure as alderman and mayor. I appreciate the things he did for our city. We'll miss him," Polk said.

MISSING TWO MONTHS, MAN FOUND DEAD

Negro is Overcome by Exposure
While on Fishing Trip, and Dies in Woods.

The body of Wiley Jackson, a negro about 75 years of age, was found in the woods about twelve miles north of Ocean Springs last Saturday by Harry Brown of this county, who was looking for a horse that had strayed. The body was in a badly decomposed condition, and it is believed that Jackson had been dead since early in March, when he was first missed. Nearby was a fishing pole and tackle which indicated that he had been out on a fishing trip, and the position of his body caused officers to believe that he had fallen over the log and, overcome by the cold, died from exposure.

The sheriff's office in Pascagoula was notified of the finding of the body, and Deputy Sheriff A. W.
Ezell and County Attorney Wm. M.
Colmer hurried to the scene. An inquest was held by Justice of the Peace A. D. Davidson, and a verdict rendered of death from exposure.

A search was made for Jackson in March by neighbors who had become alarmed at his continued absence, and on whose disappearance many conjectures had been made.

Connally Back In The Hospital

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI)— Texas Gov. John Connally, shot down with President Kennedy Nov. 22 and thought well enough to be released six days ago, was back in the hospital today with complications from his wounds.

The new ailment was inflammation of a blood vessel in his right leg, the indirect result of the sniper's bullet that passed first through his chest, then hit his wrist and went into his leg.

should look into such related matters as the moral improprieties of employees as well as their financial transactions.

The controversy may be settled Thursday when the committee meets in closed-door session to work out procedures for the inquiry, including its scope.

The procedure session also will discuss the matter of public hearings on the Baker case. Baker, a former secretary to the Senate Democratic majority resigned after his widespread business activities came under criticism.

Other congressional news:

Taxes: The Senate Finance Committee meets in executive session to begin voting on amendments to the $11 billion tax cut bill. The first amendments to be introduced are those backed by Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La. Among Long's nine amendments is one that calls for an optional plan permitting taxpayers who give up most of their deductions, to be taxed at a top rate of 50 per cent, in-

Senate for eight years before he was elected to the Presidency.

Alabama Votes On Amendments

MONTGOMERY (UPI)—Alabamians threw their support behind education and the state docks in Tuesday's statewide referendum.

The voters approved constitutional amendments to raise the corporate income tax from 3 to 5 per cent. The measure also automatically repeals a standby measure that would have prohibited industry from deducting federal taxes from state income tax returns.

The proposal will net classrooms an estimated $7.6 million annually.

The voters apparently rejected an amendment to set up a central board of registrars to make up examinations and grade voter applicant tests.

The Alabama League of Women Voters opposed the idea on grounds the intelligence tests might be made too stiff. Gov. James Folsom opposed the board on grounds it was a violation of the principle of local self-government.

Discuss Kennedy Coin

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Banking and Currency Committee today scheduled quick consideration of a plan to put a likeness of President Kennedy on new 50-cent pieces.

Chairman Wright Patman, D-Tex., called a closed session of the committee to discuss and probably vote on the legislation, submitted Monday by President Johnson.

No Senate action has been scheduled but it is expected that the measure will win quick approval when it is put to a vote.

In his proposal, Johnson did not specify the design for the other side of the coin, but Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan D-Mo., has suggested that it bear a picture of the Capitol.

She said it would be a fitting way to mark the 14 years Kennedy served in the House and Senate.

Bayou Casotte Utilities Bond Issue Ratified

The Jackson County Port Authority today ratified a Board of Supervisors sponsored county bond issue for water and sewer construction in the Bayou Casotte area, clearing the way for validation of the bonds.

At the same meeting, which was attended by city, county and port authority officials, Attorney Karl Wiesenburg announced that the objections he had entered to the validation in behalf of the city had been withdrawn.

These two actions apparently cleared the way for a chancery court decree on the Bayou Casotte annexation. Wiesenburg

Our Opinion Remembering Louis Jackson

The tragic news of the death of former Moss Point mayor and alderman Louis Jackson, 60, hit his city hard Tuesday morning and swept across Jackson County.

Jackson died in an auto accident in Alabama late Monday night.

Until health problems plagued his last four-year term, Jackson was an effective civic leader.

Before those health woes, it was said of Jackson that he never saw issues in Moss Point in terms of race. Instead he looked at the "big picture," how it would affect the whole of Moss Point.

His crowning achievement in his tenure at City Hall was the annexation of an area of Escatawpa, near Interstate 10.

Jackson fought for the expansion and current city leaders are right, the economic benefit from that annexation are now being realized. That battle went all the way to the state's highest court.

The city's first black mayor, Jackson championed annexation in the face of opposition from the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

But at the news of Jackson's passing, local NAACP leader Curley Clark called the late civic leader "a visionary."

Had it not been for the annexation in 1990 and the economic development that came with it, when the city lost its glove factory, Rohm and Haas and International Paper in 2001, Moss Point may have withered on the vine.

So in a sense, it can be said that Jackson saved his town.

Current Alderman Shorty Middleton, who served with Jackson, called him "brilliant" in municipal government. Jackson also supported Pelican Landing, a gem for the city.

His last term was clouded by health problems, the controversial jailhouse death of Marcus Malone and allowing a sludge-carrying train to stop in the city.

But taking, as Louis Jackson would, "the big picture" view of his legacy, Jackson did good things for his city.

He will be missed.

Getting aggressive

Downtown merchants in Pascagoula may be on to something. Instead of reacting as some downtown areas in the face of stiff competition from "big box" chain retailers — whining like a tired toddler about inability to compete — downtown Pascagoula is fighting back.

Some of its weapons are cosmetic. For example, the Main Street program invested $4,380 for snappy blue, white, yellow and red banners promoting Market Street merchants.

Part of this new arsenal, announced Tuesday, will actually put a little jingle back in shoppers' pockets.

The Merchants Association of Pascagoula unveiled a new program offering customer incentives.

It's a "serious shop local" idea, as MAP Chairman Bruce Grimes put it, and one with real merit.

Using a reward card, shoppers will be able to make purchases, and later use the card different ways to save

Harper deserves
citizens' support

To the editor:

As a local pastor in Moss Point, I have been greatly relieved to see how the new elections for city leadership are beginning to shape up.

It is evident that the issue over education will be one of the items that helps determine who are best qualified to lead Moss Point. For instance, the current mayor and Board of Aldermen have recently joined the fray in attempting to assassinate the character of Moss Point School Superintendent Dr. Tressie Harper. What is troubling, is that, in making accusations against Dr. Harper, they (as public leaders) should make sure that their innuendoes are factual and not hearsay.

No one, myself included, will deny that we have problems within the district. However, to misrepresent the facts does not do anything to remedy the situation. It is fact, that our test scores were low initially — however, it is also fact, that every category, the entire school district made significant advances this past year. What Dr. Harper did give the citizens, was an honest appraisal of ourselves, rather than "cook the books" to make the scores look appealing. In doing so, she has implemented a plan that is without doubt, working.

The community of Moss Point deserves to know the truth, not lies based on the personal agenda of the city leaders. A recent article in The Mississippi Press suggested that the whole community was behind the petition to remove Dr. Harper. Nothing could be further from the truth.

As I said earlier, I am glad that we are now seeing the choices facing us. As past members of Moss Point's citizenry that DOES NOT agree with the mayor or aldermen, in this instance, we are working to make the facts available and will never allow these accusations to go unchallenged. We admonish the city leaders to present the facts to the city. We also challenge the community to take the same measures that our leaders have, and begin to exercise your right to change your government with your voice and vote. In the meanwhile, we will have several community meetings to present the facts truthfully, and to present to the citizens of Moss Point, alternatives to the above leadership, should they maintain their present course. Stay tuned.

THOMAS A. JACKSON

Researched by: Glenda Jackson Reed

Family history states that Thomas A. Jackson was born 19 January 1828 and that the middle initial A. stands for Andrew. As of this date I have no documentation to prove either. The 1850 Census shows him living in Jackson County, Mississippi and married to Cynthia Ann who was also born in Mississippi. Family history says her maiden name was Gill but the LDS records show her maiden name as Eason, which I am more led to believe through the research I have done.

Thomas' occupation in 1850 was a collier (charcoal making) which was known to have been an export product sent to New Orleans from the west side of the river near Pascagoula during this time period. During this time in their household was a one year old daughter, Josephine, a fifteen year old girl named Elizabeth Cates and Elizabeth Jackson, a thirty-five year old woman.

Oral history of the Jackson family says that Thomas and his family traveled to Louisiana by wagon train sometime during the mid-1850's. There were also many other Mississippi families traveling with them such as the Cooley's, Hester's, and Vaughn's. At least one brother of Thomas' is said to have traveled on to settle in Texas. No name is known for this brother or any other of his family members. Thomas is said to have come from a large family. The 1880 Census states that his father's birth place as New York and his mother's as Mississippi. This coincides with family oral history that says his father came from "up North" looking for work and land. After arriving in Mississippi and meeting Thomas's mother, he decided to stay, marry her and settle there. Many of the other families on the wagon train settled near the Jackson's in Calcasieu Parish, Louisiana near what is now the small community of Ragley just north of Lake Charles.

Little is known about the early settlement of the Thomas A. Jackson family. His homesite was on a high hill located on the west side of what is known as Jackson Gully. The 1860 Census shows his occupation as Teamster and the value of his personal owned estate as $500.00. By then his family had grown by three more sons and another daughter whose names were John, Mary, Thomas, and Andrew. Josephine is no longer shown as living in the household, but there is an eighteen year old girl named Pamela Eason whose occupation is seamstress.

During the War Between the States Thomas served as a Private in the Texas Calvary, Company A, Daly's Army, Ragsdale's Battalion. He shows up on a list of enlisted men paroled by Lieut. Colonel William Roy at Alexandria, Louisiana on July 10, 1865. His Regiment had surrendered in New Orleans on May 26, 1865 after hearing of General Lees's surrender. His name also shows up in Records of Louisiana Confederate Soldiers and Louisiana Confederate Commands, Volume 1, compiled by Andrew B. Booth, Commissioner Louisiana Military Records, 1920.

In 1870 Thomas and his family still lived in the same place and the value of his real estate was $200.00 and his personal estate owned was $400.00 and his occupation is listed in the census of that year as farmer. By then three more sons, Albert, Henry and James were added to his ever growing family. By the 1880 Census their family was complete with the birth of George, Cynthia B., William D., Penelope R. and Cora C.. They had a total of twelve live children and the diary of a family friend, Thomas Rigmaiden, who frequently visited in their home, states that on January 15, 1865 "Mrs. Jackson's baby died at birth".

Some Jackson family members remember the oral history of this family a bit differently. It was told to them that Cynthia (they spell it Syntha) died giving birth in 1873 with the birth of her tenth child, William David, and that Thomas A. remarried to Sarah Hester sometime between 1873 and 1876 and that she gave birth to the last two children and died at the age of twenty-four. I have not been able to find any documentation of this marriage and the 1890 Census shows Cynthia Ann as being alive at the age of 48 and the mother of all twelve children. Sarah Hester's tombstone is near Thomas A.'s but does not show her name as Jackson. Cynthia (Syntha) Ann's tombstone showing her death year as 1873 is very new so this cannot be considered as documentation. LDS records show the last child, Cora Caldonia Jackson's mother maiden name as being Cynthia Ann Eason. I am now trying to locate the person who submitted that entry in order to verify it's accuracy and proof.

John Ellis Jackson, grandson of Thomas A., remembers his grandfather telling stories of an Indian man who lived with him during his latter years. There is evidence that Indians did live in that area of Louisiana during this time.

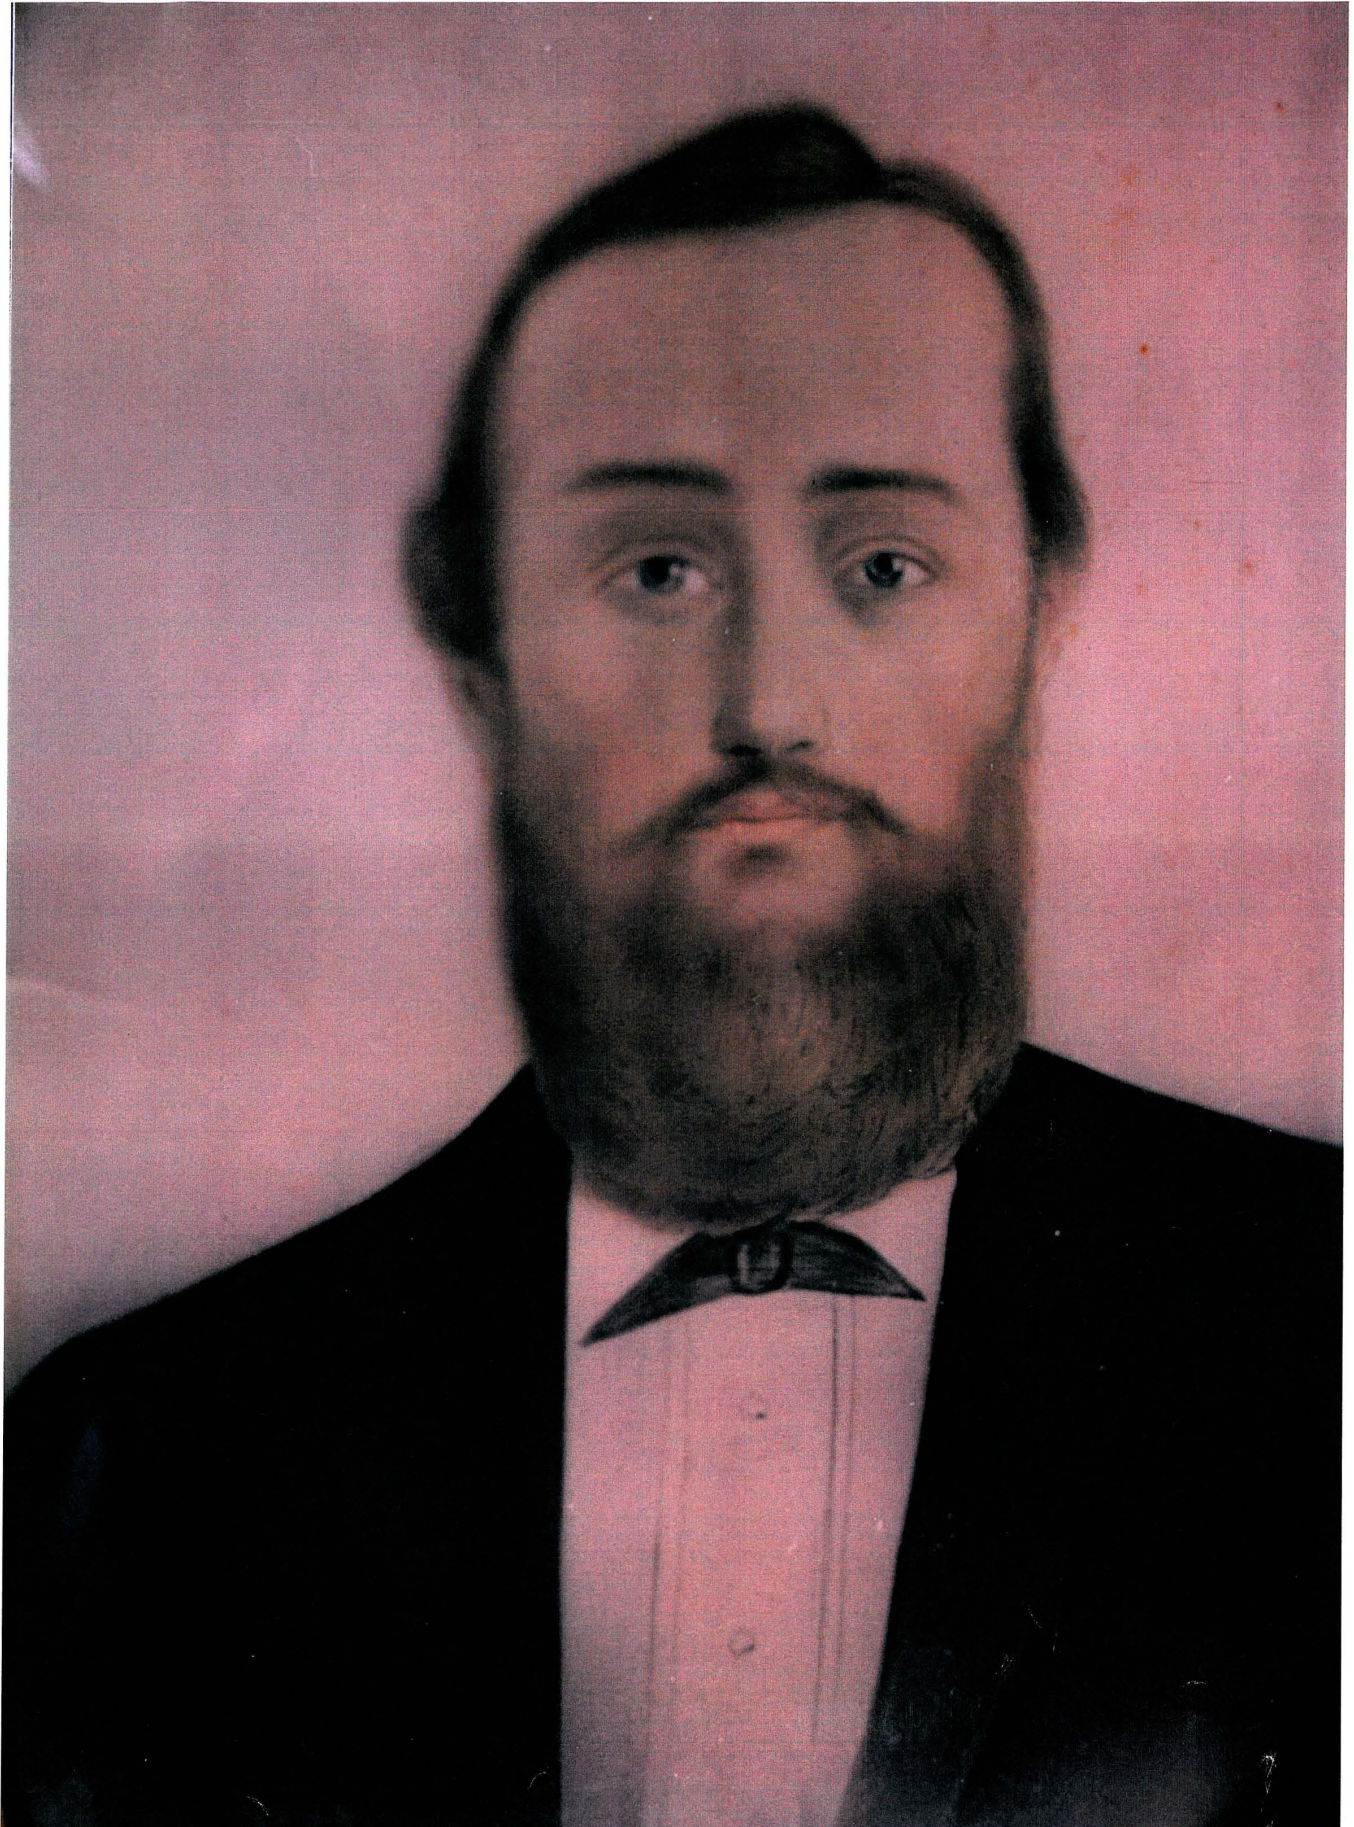

Thomas remained a farmer living on Jackson Gully the remainder of his life. He died September 1, 1900 and is buried in Hagar Cemetery along with Cynthia Ann, Sarah Hester, and several other family members. This cemetery is located within a few miles of the old Thomas A. Jackson homesite. Others are buried in Magnolia Cemetery not far away. Many Jackson decedents still live along Jackson Gully and the surrounding area.

My grandfather was William David Jackson, the tenth of Thomas and Cynthia's children. He is the only child who moved away to a different area of Louisiana. He first settled in DeRidder, Beauregard Parish, and then later settled in Russville, Vernon Parish where he homesteaded land and started several small business operations including raising cattle to provide meat to a nearby sawmill town, a cotton gin and turpentine plant, and a Mercantile store. He also served as deputy sheriff and sat on the school board for a short time to finish out the term of a deceased member. His picture hangs this day in the entrance lobby of the Pitkin High School, Pitkin, Louisiana. Will, as he was known to friends and family, remained there after the Fullerton Sawmill closed its doors and the inhabitants moved away to find work elsewhere. Russville became known as Fullerton, as it is today, and the house and store and some of the outbuildings remain standing today, though uninhabited and in great disrepair. Will died 27 September 1961 and is buried in Blue Branch Cemetery in Pitkin. His son, William David Jackson, Jr.'s house sits now where Will's cotton gin once stood. Many of his decedents still live in the nearby area.

Andrew Jackson, county's namesake

County drew name from Old Hickory

► Fourth in a series
By REGINA HINES

Mississippi Press Staff

News traveled slowly in the early days of Jackson County's existence, when there were few newspapers in the country and word from the government was dispatched to its states and territories by messenger.

One of the most famous battles of the War of 1812, led by Andrew Jackson, the man for whom Jackson County was named, has been often called needless, because of this lack of communication.

The American victory, now called the Battle of New Orleans, was actually fought 15 days after the signing of the Peace Treaty at Ghent, which ended the war. But neither the men who fought and defeated the British, nor their leaders in Washington were aware that the war was over until well after the battle.

On his way from Mobile to New Orleans in late November 1814, Andrew Jackson crossed the county named for him and stories are told about where he spent the night along the way.

Many Jackson Countians joined the ranks led by Jackson in that last battle of the war on Jan. 8, 1915. Nearly 2,000 British troops lost their lives at the hands of the frontier American militia.

The late historian Cyril Cain in his volumes Four Centuries on the Pascagoula gives a comprehensive listing of men who fought in the War of 1812 from the area that is now Jackson and George County.

The list of soldiers is as follows:

Aaron Barlow, Capt. William Bates, James Bilbo, William Ray Bilbo, William Baker, Benjamin Brashears, Sgt. William Bruner;

Aaron Burleson, John Carter,

Men who had fought in The War of 1812 from other areas of the country migrated to Jackson County over the years, swelling the ranks of veterans of this war who lived here.

Records at the Jackson County Courthouse show that some veterans received bounty land in Jackson County on the basis of their service in the war. They were: John H. Cunliffe, who had served in the Virginia militia; Clark Spencer, Levi Taylor and John Hicks, Tennessee Militia; Samuel Bartlett and Robert Dobbins, Kentucky Militia and Cherry Brocard, Louisiana Volunteers.

Some of the veterans may also have settled in present-day Perry and Greene counties, because of the change in county lines over the years. Township One of Greene County was part of Jackson County until 1847, when traveling to the courthouse in Americus proved too inconvenient for the settlers in this area.

A Tennessean, Andrew Jackson was becoming well-respected in the state as a military hero and statesman and it was decided to name the county after him.

Jackson, who had represented Tennessee in the United States Senate and House of Representatives in the 1790s, developed a reputation as a tough Indian fighter in the early 1800s. When the War of 1812 was imminent, he offered his services to President James Madison.

In 1814 a good number of Jackson County men rallied around Jackson when he asked for volunteers to help fight the Creek Indians who had been terrorizing settlers near Fort Mims, Ala. He had already earned the nickname of Old Hickory. The decisive battle of this campaign was the bloody fight of Horseshoe Bend, which resulted in the Creek surrender of 23 million acres of Indian land to the United States.

Born in North Carolina, Jackson spent most of his life around Nashville, Tenn. But the future president had ties to Mississippi and had entertained moving to the state. It was in Natchez where he wed his wife, Rachel Donelson Robards, who had fled there from Tennessee to escape her abusive first husband.

A landowner of property on Bayou Pierre near Port Gibson since 1790, Jackson twice aspired to office in Mississippi. He had applied to be governor of the Louisiana Territory, but lost to Gov. W.C.C. Claiborne. He was also unsuccessful in his bid for a judgeship in Mississippi in 1812, just before Jackson County was created.

In 1821, he was made provisional governor of Florida, followed by another term in the U.S. Senate.

When Jackson became the 7th president of the United States, serving from 1828 to 1836, Jackson Countians were proud that their county bore his name.

Though best known as the nation's president, the namesake of Mississippi's capital led a fascinating frontier life in the Mississippi territory.

THE YOUNG TENNESSEE LAWYER rode purposefully down the narrow Indian trail, red and gold autumn leaves crunching and crackling beneath his horse's hooves. Shafts of sunlight transformed his bristling sandy hair to red fire. He was a man aflame that warm fall day, burning without in the atmosphere of golden light and burning within from the fire of ambition. In the heat of driving youth, he blazed down the Natchez Trace, a twenty-two-year-old consumed with a desire to make his fortune.

Andrew Jackson had a date with destiny as he rode toward the Natchez District. Soon this land, as wild and unsettled as the man who rode its paths, would become the Mississippi Territory. The man and the land would become great together.

Jackson had spent several years riding the circuits as a lawyer in the wilderness of central Tennessee, but he knew that settlements and plantations were springing up along the Mississippi River. Businessmen were needed who could bring supplies down treacherous rivers and over winding Indian trails. Jackson intended to fill that need.

In the late 1780s, he opened a small trading post in the river settlement of Bruinsburg in what is now Claiborne County. He was well suited to the free and easy life of the frontier and lost no time in becoming one of the best-known and most well-liked men in the district.

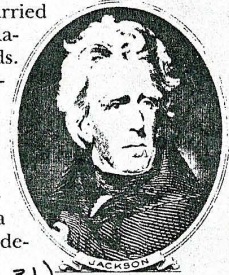

In addition to providing his neighbors with coffee and tea, Jackson sold them other necessities as well—slaves. For the rest of his life, Jackson had to deal with the charge that he not only owned slaves but sold them as well. Another serious charge—adultery—would also haunt Jackson. This accusation, like the slave-selling charge, resulted from his youthful dealings in Mississippi.

What should have been a private, uncomplicated, and joyful event in the lives of Andrew Jackson and Rachel Robards became an item of public interest which gave birth to vicious rumors and insulting accusations. Only one point has never been disputed: Andrew and Rachel Jackson were devoted to each other and their marriage was a model of faith and constancy.

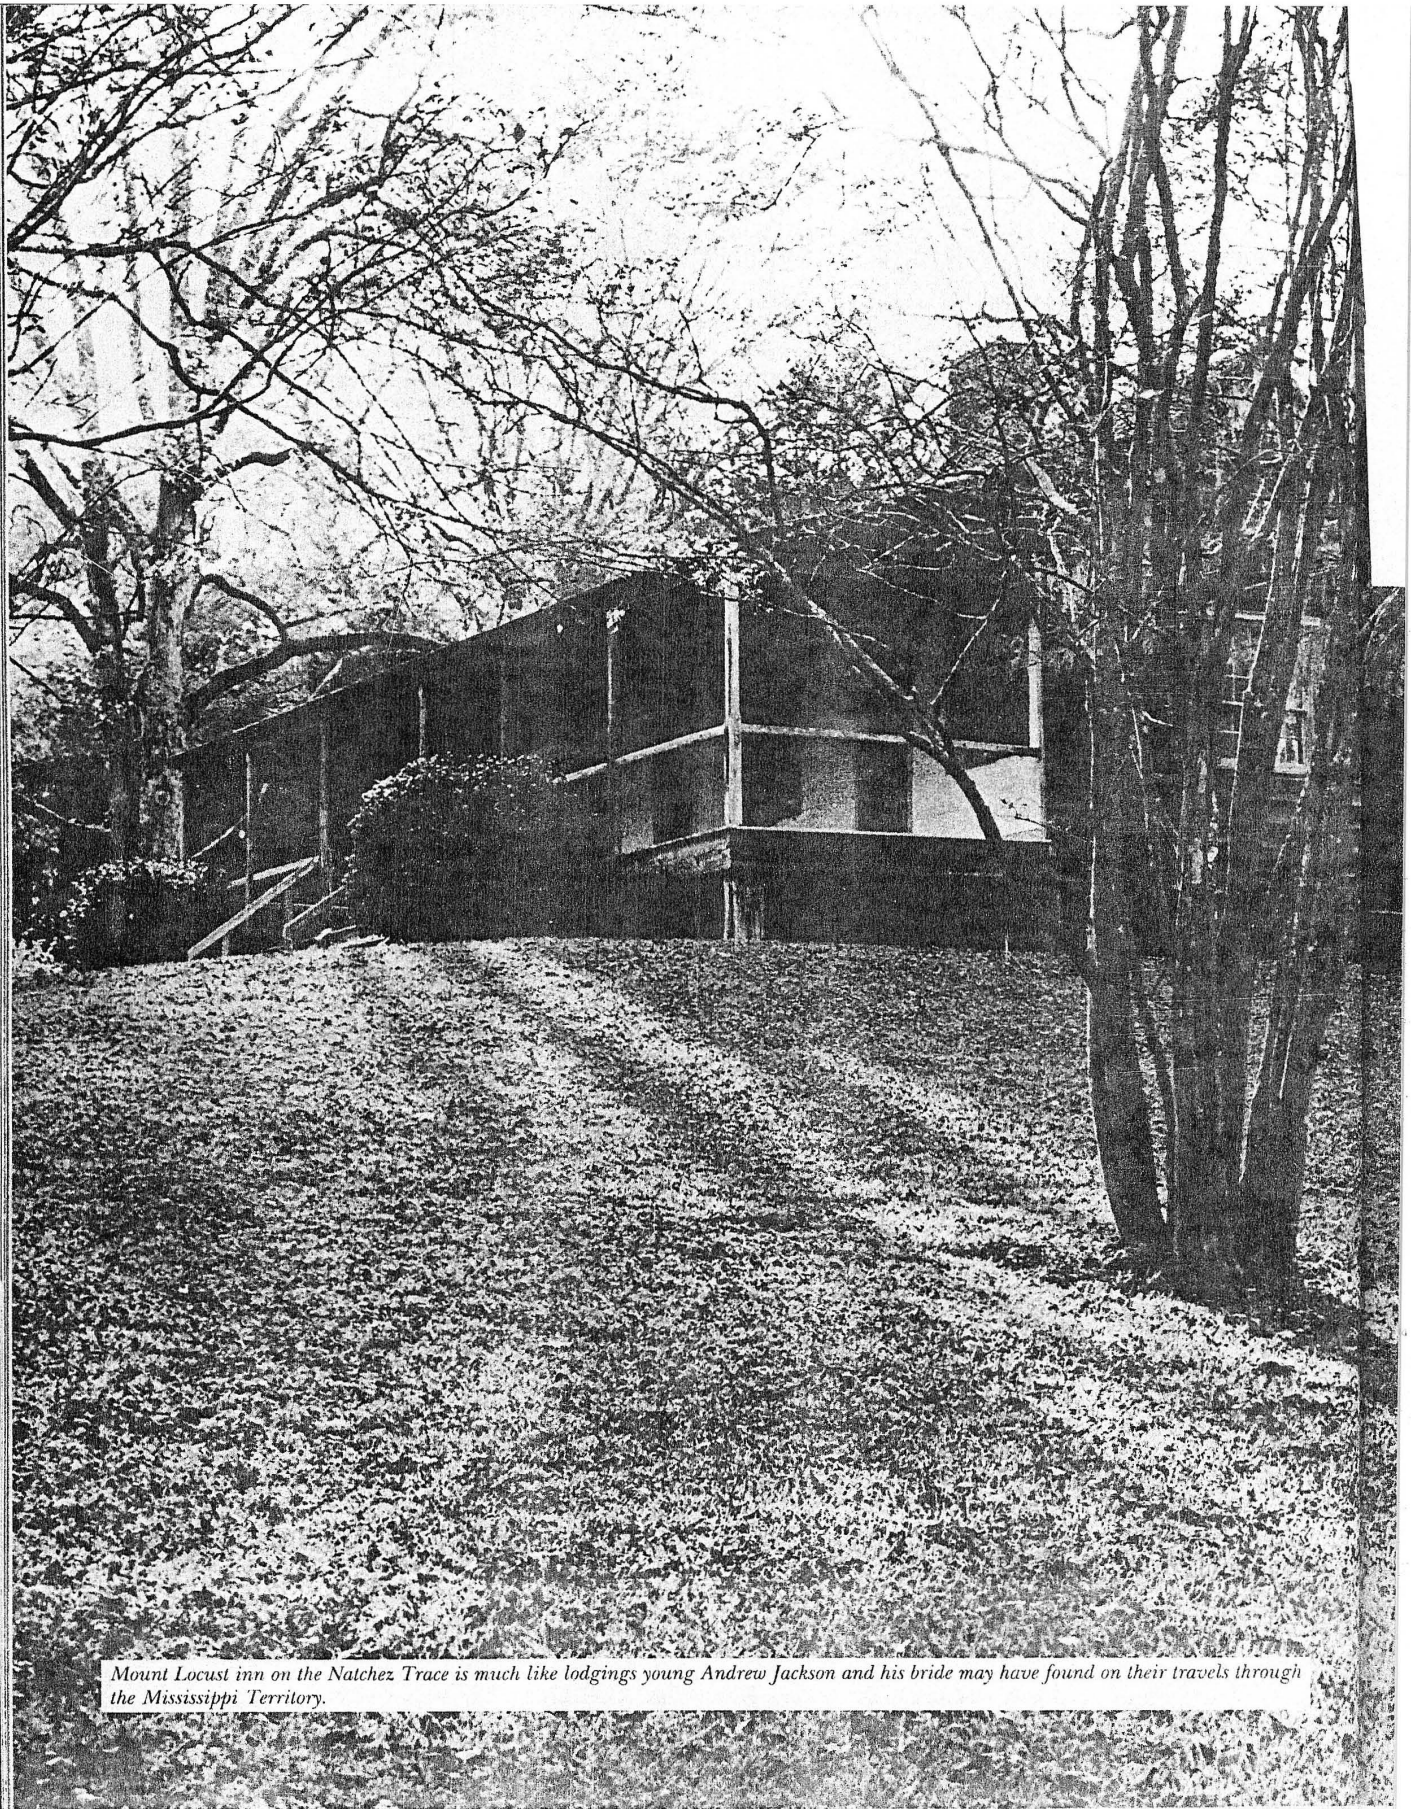

The most likely version of the clouded history of Jackson's marriage begins not in Mississippi but in Nashville in the late 1780s. Nashville was a frontier town with few buildings, and lodgings were hard to find. Many families with an extra room took in boarders.

From the Mississippi Territory Jackson had maintained his legal practice in Nashville and was in town taking care of business. He became a boarder at the house of the widow of Colonel John Donelson. Here he met Mrs. Donelson's married daughter, Rachel Robards. Rachel's marriage was floundering. Her husband, Louis Robards of Kentucky, was a jealous and de-

Arthur LaSalle will never own Springfield, but if his efforts succeed, he will be credited with saving a valuable piece of Mississippi's heritage.

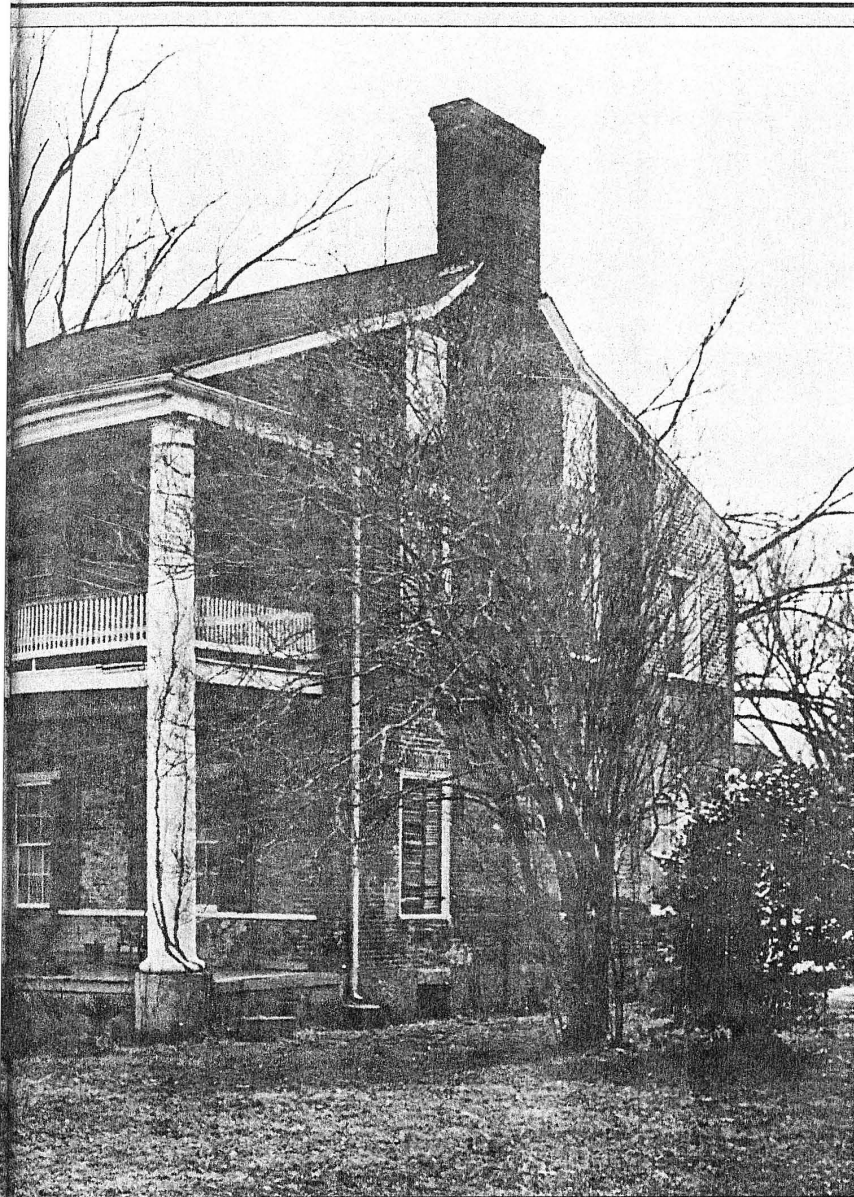

Springfield Plantation near Woodville was built around 1790 and has been nominated to the National Register of Historic Places.

THERE IS A MAN sitting out there all alone in the rural isolation of Jefferson County doing what he's doing simply because he knows it ought to be done. A man who for the past decade has put his beliefs above his own personal comfort and private gain. Arthur LaSalle is engaged in a one-man crusade to save a part of our heritage, Springfield Plantation.

"I first read about Springfield when I was sixteen years old, and it has been my lifelong desire to preserve this house," LaSalle states. The impressive old plantation home (circa 1790) is thought to be the first two-story home with full columns to be built west of the Atlantic seaboard and was the site of Andrew Jackson's marriage to Rachel Robards in 1791.

The present owners (who live in St. Louis) offered to give Springfield to the Department of the Interior, but the government declined. With Springfield in a state close to ruin, the owners closed it. LaSalle realized that no one was going to attempt to preserve the property, and after the owners declined to sell, he negotiated a lease on the house and grounds in exchange for the restoration at his own expense.

LaSalle sold his own home and for the past eleven years has been living in relative isolation with his sixteen cats and two dogs, pursuing an uphill battle for the restoration of a home he can never own. To help support himself and fund the restoration, he runs a business supplying antique railroad equipment and conducts guided tours of Springfield.

Springfield has been nominated for designation as a National Historic Landmark because of its architectural significance. This is the highest honor that private property can achieve. "Springfield should have been declared a National Historic Landmark long ago," says LaSalle. "It's an important home both architecturally and historically."

manding man, and Rachel had returned to her mother's home at Robards's insistence. Rachel and Jackson became friends, but in the beginning there was no romance. In fact, Robards joined Rachel in Nashville and she resolved to give her marriage one more try. It was futile. Robards exploded in another fit of violent jealousy, and when he left to return to his Kentucky home, Rachel vowed never to return to the marriage. She did not love Robards and worse, she feared him. Soon Robards sent word that he wanted his wife back and was coming to get her.

It was too late. By this time, Rachel and Jackson had fallen deeply in love. The entire Donelson family feared Robards and saw no alternative but to get Rachel away from Nashville as soon as possible. Jackson agreed. She was sent to the Spanish-controlled Natchez District to live at Springfield Plantation with the Thomas Green family. The Greens were old friends of Rachel's family and Thomas Green was a friend and business partner of Jackson's.

In early 1791 Jackson received the news in Nashville that Robards had obtained a divorce. Joyfully, he rushed down the Trace to Rachel's side with the news that they were free to marry. But Jackson's information was wrong. Robards, who resided in Kentucky (not yet a state), had petitioned the General Assembly of Virginia (which governed the area we know now as Kentucky) for a divorce charging Rachel Robards had eloped with another man. His petition, however, was denied. Instead he was granted an Enabling Act which only gave Robards permission to file for divorce. The Enabling Act had been granted in November 1790, but Robards had not followed through with the necessary legal action. There had been no divorce.

It seems difficult to believe that Jackson, who was a lawyer and by nature a cautious man, would neglect to check his facts. Some maintain that, as an extra precaution, Rachel had obtained a Spanish divorce while at Springfield. No proof of the divorce has been found, but through the passage of time and changing of governments, many Spanish records have been lost. Until his death, W.H. Sparks, a friend of Jackson's who had lived in the Natchez District and married into the Green family, vowed there had been a Spanish divorce. Only one fact is obvious in the entire fiasco: Andrew Jackson and Rachel Robards had believed they were free to marry.

The wedding took place at Springfield Plantation in the spring of 1791; both the bride and groom were twenty-four. As the huge oak trees lining the entrance to Springfield were budding, Jackson and Rachel were married in the drawing room of the home.

The Jacksons spent one week at Springfield following their marriage and then continued their honeymoon at Jackson's cabin on Bayou Pierre at Bruinsville. With no indication of the coming furor over their marriage, they began traveling to Nashville along the old Indian trail Jackson already knew well—the Natchez Trace.

When Robards learned of the Jacksons' marriage, he filed for divorce charging Rachel with adultery. His divorce was granted in December 1793. The Jacksons remarried in Nashville in January 1794, but the insinuations and accusations never ceased. From the moment Rachel learned of Robards's charge of adultery, her life was devastated: "I expected him to kill me, but this is worse," she said.

Jackson's temper flared again and again over the constant slander directed at his wife and he fought more than one duel defending her honor. One was with a man named Charles Dickinson who was known to be a crack shot. Dickinson quickly aimed and fired. Jackson's rib was punctured. Disregarding his wound, Jackson took careful aim and deliberately killed his opponent.

How had Jackson, in assuming his information about the divorce was correct, made such a tremendous blunder? It can only be explained within the context of their times. The Jacksons were two young people from the wilderness who were very much in love. Laws were confusing, especially in areas like the Natchez District. Americans were living under Spanish laws which were different from the British laws that had governed the area only a few short years before. Who could have guessed that the subject would continue to be pursued and that a frontier lawyer with no family and no political backing would one day be prominent in public life, would have a chance of becoming President?

During the twenty years following Jackson's marriage, he served Tennessee as a United States Representative, a United States Senator, and sat on the Supreme Court of Tennessee for six years before being appointed Major General of the Tennessee Militia. Throughout the years, Jackson continued to maintain interests in the Mississippi Territory. In fact, in 1810 Jackson was already planning to leave Tennessee and move to the Mississippi Territory. But the War of 1812 changed his future. The government called for troops to reinforce General Wilkinson from a threatened British invasion at New Orleans. Jackson organized a brigade of 1,400 infantry and riflemen and 670 mounted riflemen, and on orders sent them toward Natchez through the coldest weather in memory. Along the way, the Tennessee men were joined by hundreds of Mississippi volunteers. They grouped at Fort Dearborn near Washington but conditions at the fort were so deplorable Jackson refused to camp. He moved his troops to a farm down the road. There he waited for orders. When they came, they were not what he expected.

Wilkinson had decided that New Orleans was in no immediate danger from the British and the last thing he wanted was Jackson watching over his shoulder. He persuaded the secretary of war to discharge Jackson's men and demand that Jackson "deliver all the public stores and property in his possession into the hands of General Wilkinson, commander of the Seventh District." Jackson distrusted Wilkinson with good reason (Wilkinson had been involved in the Aaron Burr affair and would later be proven to be a traitor in the pay of Spain) and refused to dismiss his men. In effect, the government was stranding Jackson's troops, disbanding them with no means of returning to their homes. The crafty Wilkinson hoped to add Jackson's stranded men to his ranks; he did not count on Jackson's devotion to his troops. Risking personal financial disaster, Jackson borrowed money to buy the provisions necessary to take his troops home.

The trip was extremely difficult. March rains had turned the roads and trails to mush; even small streams were swollen and difficult to cross. One hundred and fifty of Jackson's men were sick. He refused to leave a single man behind and hired thirteen wagons and twenty-six packhorses to carry the sick. That wasn't enough. The officers donated their horses for the sick, and Jackson made the long march on foot, tramping through the mud by the sides of his men. Jackson wrote, "I have not rode twenty miles, the field and staff are and have been of foot..." His men admired this strong, stubborn man who shared their hardships and pain. "He is tough," they said, "as tough as old hickory." The troops followed "Old Hickory" back to Tennessee.

To the people of the Mississippi Territory, the War of 1812 was not fought over freedom of the seas; it was an Indian war—the Creek Indian War. In 1797 the Spanish had grudgingly ceded the Natchez District to the United States and the area had become part of the new Mississippi Territory, which included much of what is now the states of Mississippi and Alabama. By 1812, the Spanish were firmly entrenched in Florida and were gazing longingly to the west. With luck and a little interference, they hoped their former citizens would become disenchanted with American rule and wish to return to the Spanish fold. President James Madison feared for the safety of the vulnerable areas of southern Louisiana and the Mississippi Territory which were isolated from the settled areas of the country. In addition, Indian attacks in the area had increased and Madison was sure the English, with the help of their new Spanish allies, were backing them.

Madison was right. The Spanish at Pensacola were supplying the Creeks, who lived along the Georgia-Mississippi-Florida boundary, with weapons. The armed Creeks won the bloody Battle of Burnt Corn and one month later slaughtered more than five hundred Americans in the massacre at Fort Mims.

Mississippi panicked. Rumors of marauding Indians and impending Indian raids swept across the area in waves, sending thousands of citizens fleeing from their homes. Governor David Holmes called out the militia and appealed for volunteers in what became known as the Great Mississippi Panic of 1813.

The Battle of the Holy Ground was a turning point in the Creek War. This Creek stronghold was well defended and according to the medicine men, impenetrable by the white man. The Americans, aided by the Choctaws and their great chief, Pushmataha, attacked Creek Holy Ground. When the Creeks saw the Americans plunging into their sacred ground unharmed, it was their turn to panic.

Andrew Jackson led the fight that would end the Creek War. Again with the help of Pushmataha and the Choctaws, the Creeks were defeated at the Battle of Horseshoe Bend on March 27, 1814. The Creek War was over.

The British, however, were threatening New Orleans again. After Jackson's overwhelming success at Horseshoe Bend, his military prowess could not be ignored and he was made a major general in the United States Army. Once more, Jackson was ordered south to defend New Orleans.

Few homes existed along the river banks and trails of the unsettled areas west of the Mississippi River. One such home, that of a Methodist minister, John Ford, served as an inn for travelers and as a stockade to protect local settlers from Indian attacks. The home (south of the present community of Sandy Hook) sat about a mile from the Pearl River and was along Jackson's route to New Orleans. Saddle weary, he sent ahead to ask permission to spend the night. Although Jackson's reputation as a hero had spread far and wide, so had his reputation for the liberal use of profanity. Ford sent word that General Jackson would be welcome in his home if he promised to keep a civil tongue. Jackson agreed.

General Jackson arrived in New Orleans in December. The British Admiral, Sir Alexander Cochrane, boasted he would eat his Christmas dinner in the city. Jackson replied, "It may be so, but I shall have the honor of presiding at that dinner." The British were amused. Jackson's army was a motley group of frontiersmen. The disciplined and immaculately dressed British troops laughingly referred to them, perhaps correctly, as the Dirty Shirts. But the British didn't laugh long.

Jackson placed his troops along an old canal that bordered a ribbon of land the British had to cross. Three times the British attacked. Three times Jackson's ragtag army repelled them. At one point during the fighting, Jackson thought the aim of his gunners could be improved and shouted, "Elevate them guns a little lower." It must have worked. Their troops diminished, the British surrendered on January 8, 1815. Mrs. Jackson joined her husband in New Orleans for a series of celebrations which continued in the towns of Natchez and Washington as the Jacksons made their triumphant return to Nashville. The fact that Jackson's victory at the Battle of New Orleans actually came after the end of the war did nothing to diminish its importance or Jackson's.

The War of 1812 had opened Jackson's eyes to the problems of transporting troops rapidly and effectively through the undeveloped areas of the Mississippi Territory. He believed that for the United States to grow and prosper, transportation must be improved.

During the peace negotiations with the Creeks, Jackson had insisted on acquiring a band of land from Tennessee to the Gulf of Mexico wide enough for a road. After the war was ended, Jackson pushed for the construction of a road which would connect the settled areas of the upper South with New Orleans and Mobile. Jackson supervised the project and determined the route of the new road which came to be known as the Jackson Military Road. The road ran from Columbia, Tennessee, through Muscle Shoals, Alabama, and down to Columbus. From there it followed a south-southwesterly direction to Madisonville, Louisiana. It was a tremendous undertaking. Work began in June 1817 and on August 29, 1820, announcement was made of its completion. It was one of the finest roads in the nation.

Mississippi needed land for expansion, and after two failed attempts to make a treaty with the Choctaws, the Mississippi congressional delegation asked President James Monroe to enlist the help of General Jackson. In a letter to John C. Calhoun, Jackson replied, "I had determined to never have anything to do again in Indian treaties," but, "I never can withhold my services when required by Mr. Monroe. I owe a debt of gratitude to the people of Mississippi and their late governor for their support in our late struggle with Great Britain; by him and them I was well supported. I feel it is a duty, therefore, to endeavor to serve them, when they, by their representations, believe I have it in my power."

Jackson returned to Mississippi and on October 18, 1820, he finalized the Treaty of Doak's Stand with the Choctaw chiefs Pushmataha and Mashulatubbee. The Choctaws gave up their lands in the lower Delta and Central Mississippi. Soon Mississippi would create a new state capital within the newly ceded land. It would be named in honor of Andrew Jackson.

No man in history had a more profound effect on the territory and state of Mississippi than Andrew Jackson. In return, no area had a more profound impact on Andrew Jackson. The man and the state grew up together. Mississippi was Jackson's "proving ground," and Jacksonian democracy had its beginnings on the rough, muddy trails of Mississippi. Mississippi would stand solidly behind Jackson in his bids for the Presidency. When Jackson died in 1845, Governor Albert Brown praised Jackson: "He died . . . full of years and full of honors. . . . He was ever the fast and unchanging friend of Mississippi." ●

Soldier made it as far as Byram

By Carl McIntire
Special to The Clarion-Ledger

Catching up on correspondence that comes to this column:

To James O. Sanders of Kailua, Hawaii, we have not been able to locate the Mrs. Jackson and her family who cared for your great-great-grandfather near Byram as he tried to walk home to Tennessee from Vicksburg after the Civil War. We told of his attempt, and death near Byram, but readers have not been able to identify the Jackson family which took him in and gave him care, then buried him.

Elton Hickman of Terry reports there are many unmarked graves in the cemetery of the First Baptist Church in Byram and that he knows of only one other old Byram Cemetery.

Mrs. Martin P. Wehling of Hattiesburg tells of her late brother, Frederick Francis Mellin, who as a child in Mississippi was an amateur geologist, but grew up to become recognized even overseas. The British Museum named a fossil for him, she reports, and he collected fossils in Mississippi and sent them to the American Museum of Natural History.

Eugene W. Jones Jr. of Goose Creek, S.C., writes to see if we know the location of the Wright House that figured in a Civil War battle near Jackson. He is researching a South Carolina regiment (24th Volunteers) and understands they were stationed on the Wright Farm.

WEEKENDER

We do not recall any mention of the Wright farm, but perhaps some readers do and will be able to give us some data about its location. The South Carolinians were here during the week of the Battle of Jackson in 1863.

Dr. D.H. Butts of Jackson wants to know how Fortification Street got its name. We do not have a definitive answer, but it seems a sure bet that it comes from that street having been generally the northern boundary of the city of Jackson during the Civil War.

R.M. Heath of Ridgeland tells how he and E.C. Bowen went 30 years ago to the site of the signing of the treaty of Doak's Stand to see if they could find any evidence of the folks who were there, including Andrew Jackson.

Surprised, at such a late date, to find anything, they did spot "about a dozen round rifle shells, a china sherd from the early 19th century, gun flints, a pistol barrel and one inch sections of long stem tobacco paper of the type used in Colonial times." He adds that there were some old bricks from the Doaks Inn and a number of Choctaw Indian shards.

Heath says he had read that Andrew Jackson had carved his initials "A.J." on an old tree at the site to mark the place of the signing. The tree is gone, but Heath is sure he put his foot in the hole where the trunk of that red oak had been.

He tells another story from the lore of Andrew Jackson, detailing a visit Old Hickory made to a place near present day Ridgeland. He won't vouch for the yarn, but reports:

"Andrew Jackson was traveling from New Orleans back to Tennessee, going northward along the Natchez Trace. He had gone to New Orleans to purchase slaves — about 20 — which were to be put to work at his farm. It was during the period before he became president. When he arrived at the Choctaw Agency he was given some trouble by the agent, Silas Densmore. I think the agency was kind of like a check point in the Territory. The way I heard the story was that a slave owner had to have a slave pair to get past the agency . . . Well, Jackson did not have a pair so the gent detained them. Jackson went on northward to Nashville without the slaves, who were sent back to New Orleans. Many years later, after Jackson became president, he sought out the situation of Mr. Densmore who was still a government agent at the Choctaw Agency. Jackson had him discharged. Densmore found a new job as an agent in Alabama and Jackson had him fired from that job, too."

Marilyn Everman of Creston, Iowa, asks if we can assist her in locating data about B.F. Cox who married Melinda Jane McCormick on May 23, 1854. We are sorry to report we have no information.

An old friend, Glen Shows, who used to be a Mississippian, but now lives out in Texas, sends us his latest booklet on family genealogy. Glenn has published four of these before on other branches of his family, and now adds this fifth one on the Berrys, The Simpson County Berry Patch.

John and Edith Berry were some of the earliest settlers in Simpson County, which was formed in 1824, and Glenn has followed their line for six generations.

Barry reunions, he notes, have been held annually since 1960 and since 1983 have been held at Strong River Baptist Church, on Highway 472 out from Pinola, on the second Saturday of September.

Shows records that John and Edith Berry were members of the Strong River Baptist Church, organized on Aug. 27, 1827, having joined in 1829 and 1831. The log building was in use and John became a messenger of the church to the associational meetings.

The Berry family came to America in the 1600s, settling in Virginia, and later generations moved to South Carolina, then Alabama and finally into Mississippi. He has most of the names and some information about many. His booklet is available for $7 and his address is 1145-36NE, Paris, Texas, 75460.
